

Interested in University of Bristol academics offering a free seminar on inequalities and bias in education?

Free workshop for teachers, headteachers, and all interested school staff

Led by Dr Katherin Barg, Senior Lecturer in Education, as part of an ESRC-funded BIPE project on teacher bias in primary education.

This 1-2 hour workshop gives an overview over ‘traditional’ and recent academic research on social and ethnic inequalities, and ‘teacher bias’.

Reflective and creative group activities will guide participant discussions on this research and their own experiences, for an interactive and thought-provoking workshop.

For more information, email bipe-project@bristol.ac.uk

We offer a free 1- to 2-hour workshop that can be held online or in person, at a date and venue convenient for you (for example, in your school)

The workshop could be part of teacher CPD or initial teacher training

Content of the workshop

(can be adjusted based on your interests)

- Previous and recent academic research on socioeconomic and ethnic inequalities in education
- Theories and evidence around self-fulfilling prophecies in the classroom
- The role of teacher-student relationships
- The impact of teacher expectations on students
- Potential biases in teachers' perceptions of students' academic abilities and attitudes

Participants are encouraged to critically discuss academic research and share their own experiences and views. It is also an opportunity to develop and share strategies for their classrooms and schools to tackle inequalities.

To meet and discuss further, email Dr Katherin Barg at bipe-project@bristol.ac.uk
